

Injabulo – a Zulu word for happiness.

Wonderful memories of Africa, the people and their ability to smile always, despite poverty and deprivation were the inspiration for Injabulo. Having lived in South Africa for 3 years, Chrissie & Roger Sherwood were determined to do something to make a difference once they returned to the UK. Searching for projects to support wasn't easy but eventually the products came to them through various contacts. Ceramic buttons were the way forward into the "knitting and stitching" side of craft and they now have a portfolio of products that are not only practical but make wonderful gifts as well.

Ladies from the local community in Johannesburg, South Africa, have been trained in the art of button making. Each button is made and painted entirely by hand. Most of the Incomparable team had never held a paintbrush before they joined the company and are now absolute masters of their brushes and justifiably proud of their work. The ladies' sense of belonging within the company and skills as crafters not only gives them tremendous pleasure but provides them with economic empowerment and has uplifted their families.

From the sourcing of the raw materials to the presentation of the finished product the parent company in South Africa is involved in the entire production process. This allows them to confidently present to you a durable and unique product range of exceptional quality at an affordable price. The company is also very strongly committed to using environmentally friendly materials and production processes.

'from Debbie Cripps'

8 Christchurch Street West, Frome, Somerset. BA11 1EQ Tel. 01373 454448

www.debbiecripps.co.uk